OUR STORY

Our story begins in Madison, Wisconsin, in 1970, with a man named David Spradling. Driven by a profound love for photography and a fascination for backlit photographic images, Spradling founded DSA Signage. His background in commercial photography instilled an appreciation for the dramatic intensity of backlit images, which, according to Spradling, “popped” and attracted more attention due to their superior tonal range. The earliest products from DSA were a high-speed dryer for film processing and a photo paper storage device, inspired by Spradling’s intimate familiarity with the photographic process.

As our product range expanded to include lightboxes, drive-thru hardware, digital kiosks, and more, so did our leadership. Bob Riley took the reins as CEO following Spradling’s departure, contributing significantly to the company’s growth over his tenure. His successor, Shokouh Shafiei, has led DSA to even greater heights, facilitating our move to the expansive Rancho Dominguez facility.

Over the years, our facilities have grown along with our ambitions. From our humble beginnings in Madison, Wisconsin, to our current home in Rancho Dominguez, California, we have continually sought to increase our manufacturing capabilities to keep pace with our expanding customer base, like Starbucks, EssilorLuxottica, and more.

Our journey from a manufacturer of photographic products to a leader in display solution technology is marked by growth, innovation, and a relentless commitment to our customers. With each new chapter, our passion for crafting premium display solutions burns brighter. From our very first customer to our latest and from our smallest lightbox to our largest digital signage solution, every piece of our history is a testament to our dedication to quality, innovation, and customer satisfaction.
